

Unexpected illnesses and accidents often require the transfer of a patient to a facility that offers specialized care. Your loved one is being transferred to Cabell Huntington Hospital for treatment, and we are honored to be offered the opportunity to provide care. We are here to help not just the patient, but the entire family in dealing with the circumstances that brought you to our hospital. Please don't hesitate to ask the nursing staff for help with any of the details of your stay.

The Burn Intensive Care Unit

Cabell Huntington Hospital's Burn Intensive Care Unit is the only unit of its kind in West Virginia. The closest similar units are in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Columbus. Our physicians and registered nurses have special talents and training for treating people who have suffered serious or life-threatening burns.

The unit focuses on the team approach to helping burn victims and recognizing the complications that often occur as the result of a burn. Physical and occupational therapists, dietitians, respiratory therapists, pastoral counselors and social workers work together with the medical staff to help burn patients address each facet of their recovery.

Controlling infections is a primary concern for burn victims. As a result, the four-bed unit is secluded from other areas of the hospital and all rooms have positive air flow. Patients stay in private rooms where they are provided treatment, including high-tech dressings and wound care, and rehabilitation assistance. The unit is equipped for virtually any medical procedure or emergency.

Visiting hours: 1 to 1:30 p.m.; 5:30 to 6 p.m.; and 7:30 to 9 p.m.
